

The Big Bang Theory Revised

What is the “Big Bang”? Well for some of us it was always taught that it was the start of the different galaxies that are found throughout space. It was supposed to be Time Zero, plus one. It was supposed to be the start of the evolutionary cycle which would eventually introduce life, as we know it, all the way to the introduction of the human animal to the one and only life chain known so far. But you know what? I have found out that this historical Big Bang Theory is wrong! Not the concept, but the term.

The real “Big Bang” actually relates to the genetic differences found between the male and female human animals. It really should be the theory that supports the fact that men and women are both contributors to the birth of children here on earth – by the way human children only and, at a minimum, they are supposedly equal contributors. Now, how can this be true? Well, it actually relates to the extremely powerful and little known chemistry of the powerful male only element, better known as sperm. And this can be easily proven when the concept of conception is properly analyzed. Here you have the male sperm meet up with the female egg, again this is the real “Big Bang”, and they mutually agree to a lifetime period of co-existence where after the first nine months in the female body they produce another human animal. And this new human animal, even when less than 9 or 10 pounds at birth, all came from the linkage of that tiny sperm and the small egg while in the female womb. So, in order to properly understand this element we do need to look more closely at the power of the male contribution!

Now, it seems that the sperm is the most powerful chemical composition known to man. Men claim to be ½ of every child, in the well-educated parts of the world and even more so in the less developed nations. In these right wing male controlled societies, the males dominate and profess to be the ones in charge and the ones responsible for almost everything including the creation and development of the family. It seems that, in these male dominated societies, the males have put more into the children that are born than the females. Females seem to be very wrong in thinking they are the major factor when it comes to being pregnant for nine months and delivering the children. They seem to think that they are the primary source of life development for the animal in their womb. But they are obviously very wrong. Now, this error takes us back to the misunderstood power of the male part of the species. And this understated complex male contribution via the powerful sperm has really misled all of us, particularly those of us who believe in equality. Well, this initial and misunderstood power of the male part of human development is a problem. If we were properly educated we would learn that the power of the sperm is in itself proof of the male’s right to dominate human life from the point of conception all the way into the everlasting life found in almost all cultures and societies.

Again, almost every society on earth has learned and understands that the male contribution related to childbirth needs to be learned correctly. Male superiority rights are actually misunderstood in some cultures. This needs to change. Judging from this acceptance of male dominance in this world, when it comes to this statement, the proof is in the pudding. Oh, excuse me again. This is not the primordial pudding that existed before this earth was formed. Anyway, the world’s acceptance of this theory is that there is no doubt that the male sperm is far more powerful than professed by the human body experts of today. That sperm, and remember that only one of them attaches to the egg, is so powerful it takes on at least 50% of the child's growth and development in the womb. Therefore, the male human animal can take responsibility and therefore authority for a minimum of one half of the child when it is born. Males are  $\frac{1}{2}$  the parent and can take at least that much in the development and control of their children. And who thought that the development of the many solar systems was incredible? Here, on this tiny planet, the female acceptance of this theory, which allows for male control, sets the male dominance of society as the proper legal and ethical basis for societal structures. The powerful male agent found in the sperm is proof of the "Bigger Bang"!

Oh, by the way, to make this easier for you females of today to accept this theory, it is well known that the female side of the animal man will eventually take over the known human race as medical experts no forecast that the decline of the male part of the population, due to the deficits related to the Y chromosome, is inevitable. Your XY structure is actually far more powerful and simply hidden at the moment. This developing human Black Hole will eventually take over the original animal man's Big Bang.
